Anastasia Stevens, daughter of Time-Life's correspondent in Moscow, is the only American member of the Bolshoi, now at the Met. She was raised in Moscow, but speaks English like an American . . . U.S. currency is strange to her. Shopkeepers are startled to hear her ask, in an American accent: "How much is that in rubles?"

James B. Donovan, the lawyer who arranged the swap of Francis Gary Power, for Soviet spy Rudolf Abel, is the subject of a lead article in True. Donovan is favored to get the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate . . . While Abel was in jail here, the spy wrote to the Times, requesting a copy to be delivered to him every morning. He received a reply: "We're sorry, but we have no delivery route in your area at this time."
